GUIDING QUESTIONS
1. What are the geographic differences between Virginia and West Virginia?
2. How did these very different geographies propel the two Virginias to go in separate directions?
3. Was slavery a dividing factor between the two Virginias?

LESSON ACTIVITIES
1. Video clip: Have students view the following clip on the formation of West Virginia.
   http://www.wvencyclopedia.org/articles/2034.
2. Article: Have students read the following article: “Sectionalism and the Virginias” at http://www.wvencyclopedia.org/articles/229. Provide copies of the attached chart. Complete the chart with the students as they read the article together as a class. Be certain that the students understand the differences between eastern and western Virginia before continuing with the lesson.
3. Fence-riding debate on West Virginia statehood: Have the students read the following articles.
   Remind the students they are looking for issues of sectionalism between the two Virginias between 1700 and 1860. Remind the students that their reading should focus Divide students in two groups, leaving 4, 5 or 6 students as undecided. Students in each group will take opposing sides (as assigned by the teacher) on the issue of West Virginia statehood. Students may be arranged in chairs facing each other, or they can stand in a straight line facing each other. The fence-riders sit in the middle between the opposing sides. Students have one minute to present their argument for or against statehood and secession from the state of Virginia and the opposing side has one minute to ask questions. Then the debate will go to the other team with the same time limits. During this time the fence-riders will listen and decide their opinion on the issue. The fence-riders will have time to ask questions and then they make their decision. The side that receives the most fence-riders wins!

4. Formation of West Virginia: Students can finalize their work by reading the following article: http://www.wvencyclopedia.org/articles/2034. Have the students write a letter to the editor stating their opinion on West Virginia statehood. Have them use the articles and reasons they used to support their sides during the debate as support for their opinion in their letter to the editor. The fence-riders can write their letters based on the sides they chose during the debate.
