LESSON PROCEDURES
1. Teacher will introduce the state’s natural resources. Students will be instructed to research a particular resource.
2. Students will use 15 minutes to become experts about their particular resource. The focus question is: Why is this the most valuable resource for West Virginia?
3. Students will work in pairs silently debating which resource is the most valuable for our state.
4. During the silent debate, students will pass one piece of paper back and forth. They will each make the points for their topic in the debate. For example, a pair of students may have coal... and water to debate. One will debate why coal is more valuable than water, and the other will debate why water is more valuable than coal. One of the students will have to concede, leaving them with one item/resource per pair of students.

5. In closing, the teacher will highlight important aspects of each resource. Then the students will share which resource “won” in their debates. They will tally this information on the board and select a final “winner.” Further debate as a class will cause students to justify and defend the class findings.
